ONLY ONE CHANCE FOR JASPER.

His Qualifications as Viewed by the Young Girl and Her Mother.

"I should like to ask you one question, Euphorbia," said her mother. "Are you going to marry Major Hustable?"

There was a cold, steely glitter in the young woman's eye, and her lip curled in scorn, as she answered:

"I am not, mamma."

"Yet he seems to be a perfectly unobjectionable young man."

"I am aware of it."

"He is in exceptionally good financial circumstances."

"I have never taken the trouble to find out whether he is or not."

"Your father has. He says he is independently rich."

"Well, what of it?"

"And he is handsome."

"Yes, but no handsomer than half a dozen other men I know."

"He is only five or six years your senior."

"Oh, he's all right, so far as age goes."

"Other girls find him attractive, I suppose. What is the reason you do not?"

"I haven't said I don't find him attractive."

"Yet you are not going to marry him?"

"No—not unless there is a dead-set objection in his way of conducting himself in one particular!" exclaimed the saucy girl, crushing a bunch of really nothous flowers in her pinkish hand and flinging them away frantically.

"What is that?" anxiously inquired her mother.

"I'll have to ask me to marry him," Chicago Tribune.

Marrying for Money.

Colonel Mr. Jephson was thinking of marrying a girl "with money." His friend Rogers advised against it for reasons which he was unable to give.

"My boy," he said, "before I was married, my wife inherited $500 from her grandfather. The whole town knew it. When I built a store, they said—"

"This wife's money," they said.

"When I built a house, the same neighbors round."

"His wife's money."

"After a while I took stock in the new gas and electric company."

"Aha!" said the treasurer. "I see you are investing some of your wife's money."

"All my life that poor little $500 has received the credit for everything I have been able to achieve."

"I don't care if my wife spent the money, the day she got it for a diamond ring and a piano. She lost the ring a week later, and I guess some of the neighbors have talked heartily that she would lose the piano."

His Choice.

There was nothing wild in the colonel's manner, so the lady at the employment bureau desk was rather startled when he told his wants.

"I wish to engage a cook," he observed.

"Fancy or plain?" she said.

"Plain homely as sin," he replied. "In fact, I don't care whether she can cook or not. Any old thing that looks like a cook will do."

"Really, I—"

"And if she drinks, smokes, or steals silver, so much the better."

"Goodness me! What?"

"I specially desire that she is very strong and in the habit of beating her employer with a club."

"Upon my word!"

"In short I want a rampant, athletic rip-roaring terror, and I can promise good wages."

The lady at the desk was begging central to connect her with the police department.

"Hold on!" explained the caller. "Allow me to say that the domestic I seek will be in the employ of my wife's mother. Judge."

EGYPTIAN MONUMENTAL COLORS

Despite Their Great Age They Have Never Faded.

Despite their extreme old age, in spite of the long time that those colors have been exposed to the influences of the weather, they are yet so brilliant and fresh that it is scarcely conceivable that they have endured for thousands of years. With few exceptions, these astonishingly durable colors were made of minerals.

The ever present brownish red was a mixture of ferric-oxide and clay from the Egyptian red iron-ore beds.

As for the yellow color, besides gold bronze and leaf gold, ferric-oxide was also made to serve, this being mixed, according to the shade desired, with variable masses of alumina, lime, and the like.

By heating these last mixtures, the brown tints were obtained, and the orange shades by adding red.

An inscription written by a builder of the Pyramids, Neh

Fered, and placed there four thousand years before Christ, proudly proclaims that "All color decorations for the Temple must be everlasting as the gods themselves."
